minutes away from the main road and from the sandy beaches of Fuengirola.

Fuengirola is a large town and municipality on the Costa del Sol in the province of Málaga in the autonomous community of Andalusia in southern Spain. It is located on the central coast of the province.

It is a major tourist resort, with more than 8 km of sandy beaches, stretching from the Sohail Castle to the west and Torreblanca to the east.

Fuengirola is served by the C-1 commuter rail service from central Málaga, run by Cercanías Málaga. The train and bus stations are in the centre of town. Of the approximately 72,000 permanent inhabitants registered in the municipality, 25% come from other countries, mainly European (England, Ireland, Scotland, Finland and Sweden, among others), and also from Morocco and Argentina. In the summer especially, the town plays host to throngs of visitors both Spanish and foreign, but in particular British. The English-speaking community, in particular, is large enough to support a fully developed programme of activities and local groups.

The town is largely urban in character, with many high-rise blocks of flats near the seafront and elsewhere. There are some narrow streets with many low-rise villas.

Perfect for a family holiday all year round.
